LEADERSHIP: ORDER FROM CHAOS

DAVID LANNERS
PRESIDENT & EXECUTIVE CONSULTANT
LCS INTERNATIONAL, INC.

The objective of this presentation is to show that, by using simple ideas from many disciplines, manufacturing leaders can dramatically improve overall project management effectiveness, while promoting efficient use of resources. The art of leadership includes the ability to bring order out of chaos. Consequently, success or failure of large-scale projects may depend primarily on the methods employed by project leaders. Because change is strongly linked to anxiety, leaders must be prepared to manage chaos and anxiety in order to bring about constructive change.

This presentation shows how structure and process can play important roles in shaping the problem-solving style of an organization. Team structures are used to foster a sense of order and control, while procedures are used to foster creativity and manage anxiety.

As President of LCS International, Mr. Lanners directs the implementation of effective quality improvement and cost reduction programs in a wide variety of manufacturing and distribution settings. Before joining LCS International, he held a variety of technical, advisory, and managerial positions with major high-tech companies. Mr. Lanners is distinguished by certification from the American Society for Quality Control and the American Production & Inventory Control Society. Mr. Lanners holds a BS degree with High Honors from the University of Minnesota and an MBA degree from Harvard University.
